Miss Anna Albrecht Has Made 65 Sweaters Since June 1—Expected To Make 100 But Is Called As A War Nurse

If Kahului actually has the champion Junior Red Cross knitter of the territory in the person of Ida Tom, the 10-year old Chinese girl who has made 9 sweaters since June 21, the Paia Red Cross branch lays claim with considerable confidence, to having the champion woman knitter of the Islands.

This is Miss Anna Albrecht, a member of the nursing staff of the Paia Hospital, who since June 1 has completed and had accepted 65 sweaters. Miss Albrecht averages a sweater in less than 2 days, and does it in connection with her other duties at the hospital.

Maui is to lose this remarkable knitter, however, as she leaves next week to join the army or navy hospital service, with expectation of being sent to France. She had hoped to make 100 sweaters for the Paia Red Cross but the acceptance of her application for service will prevent her realizing this ambition.

McMahon's Poems Warm If This Story Is True

Most everyone knows that P. Maurice McMahon, formerly of Honolulu but now court reporter of the second circuit court and a resident of Wailuku, is a poet of passion, but few probably have suspected that his effusions were of the ardent character indicated by the Honolulu Advertiser in the following news story which appeared in Wednesday morning's issue:

Probably McMahon's Poems

The fire department was called out yesterday evening shortly after seven o'clock by a fire in an outhouse of a residence owned by Mrs. Stanley Cutter, 226 Dewey Avenue, near Fort De Russy. The fire started in a box of goods belonging to P. Morris McMahon, which was stored in the out-house. As there was a gallon of gasoline, a kerosene lamp and other inflammable goods in the box there was probably spontaneous combustion, says Fire Chief Thurston. Others inclined to the belief that some of McMahon's poems must have been in the box.

Mrs. Cutter and her neighbors succeeded in putting the fire out with water from a garden hose before the fire department arrived. The damage was confined to the goods stored in the box and amounted from ten to twenty dollars. Several years ago another house of Mrs. Cutter's near this same location was destroyed by fire.

Haiku Farmers Urge County Fair For 1919

At a recent meeting of the Haiku Farmers' Association the matter of the Maui county fair, which has been the subject of consideration for some time, was again brought up for consideration and the following resolutions concerning it adopted:

WHEREAS, the members of the Haiku Farmers' Association are firmly convinced that a county fair is of the greatest value to any rural community, and that the County of Maui is no exception in this respect; and—

WHEREAS, the First Maui County Fair in 1916 was an unequalled success, and is generally recognized to have been of the highest value to the whole county in stimulating interest in general and special types of agriculture, particularly in the various branches of livestock husbandry; in bringing the whole people of Maui into closer harmony; and in teaching the lessons of co-operative effort; and—

WHEREAS, we believe that not only should the Maui County Fair be made an annual institution, but that the fact that the Nation is engaged in a great war should be considered a reason for, rather than against holding such a Fair; now therefore:

BE IT RESOLVED, That the Haiku Farmers' Association hereby places itself on record as favoring holding a County Fair in the summer or fall of 1919, and yearly thereafter, whether or not a Territorial Fair be held; and that copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Maui County Fair & Racing Association, the Maui Chamber of Commerce, and to Board of County Supervisors; and that our officers be directed to do all in their power to bring about the realization of this object.

Miss Bernice Cook and Miss Martha Simpson, of Honolulu, who have been spending their vacation on Maui, made the trip on foot over the ditch trail from Kailua and return, on Monday and Tuesday of this week. They went as far as Keanae and report a delightful outing with no rain. They were unable to get horses for the trip, and rather than miss it made it on foot.

During their visit they have made the trip to the top of Haleakala, seen Iao Valley, and visited Kahakuloa, besides seeing various places of interest on central Maui.

Miss Cook returned home on Wednesday, but Miss Simpson remained a few days longer and will go down tomorrow.

Demurrer Sustained In E. O. Born Case

The case of E. O. Born, cited on the eve of his departure for the mainland to show cause why he should not be required to pay into the circuit court the sum of $100 which he was alleged to have taken as a fee in a divorce proceeding he was presumed to bring for certain parties, and further why he should not be punished for contempt for representing himself an attorney with power to bring such divorce action when he was not, was decided on a demurrer of Born's attorney, by Judge Barr this morning.

The decision sustains the demurrer, but gives the petitioner leave to amend his petition. The court states that the alleged action of Born should warrant his disbarment, but that the law cannot permit such assumption based simply on "information and belief," as in this case, notwithstanding that Born's attorney had admitted having the money in question in his possession.

ARE WE ALWAYS HONEST?

By Rev. J. Charles Villiers, Church of the Good Shepherd.

In his farewell address to the elders and people of Israel, at the close of his long and useful career as the successor of Moses, Joshua urges Israel in coming days to: "Leave unto the Lord, and to serve Him in sincerity and truth." He tells them, in words of countless courage, that they have not always served the Lord, and that the result of their defection had been ill for them. There had been times when they were alive, and obedient to their high calling. But there had been other times when they had grown weary in well-doing, and had preferred their own ease and comfort above faithful adherence to their covenant with God. Joshua traces their defection to the fact of their failure to recognize the relation of religion to all the varied circumstances and experiences of life. While solemn reproof has a large place in Joshua's address, its spirit is that of solicitude for Israel's welfare.

He calls upon the people to make up their minds, once for all, as to who shall be their God. "Choose you," he says, "whom ye will serve?" Joshua's words are so solemn and earnest in their appeal that the people realize that no thoughtless or shallow response to them will satisfy either him or themselves. He wants no answer from them until they have counted the cost of that answer, and no pledge given half-heartedly, in doubt of their ability to keep it. Their answer must be that of caution; their pledge must be of courage, given in full and free acknowledgment that "Duty is ours, and events are with God." Now there are times when to do our duty with fidelity and constancy requires courage, more courage, perhaps, than some people think. We need courage to live honestly, even though such a statement may make some people smile. These people would say that it requires no great degree of courage for them to live honestly. Well, perhaps not. But, I repeat, we need courage to live honestly—using the word honestly, now, in the broadest sense, and in its widest application.

I think it is safe to say that in monetary matters the great majority of men, in every walk of life, are honest.

The greatest part of the world's commerce and business is done on faith and trust. Confidence is the greatest factor in it. While there are men who are indifferent in money affairs, and business obligations, such men are few in comparison with that great body of men, the world over, whose word is their bond. But there are provinces of life in which money is not the chief factor, and in which while honesty is required it is not always given. How many of us are strictly honest in paying our debts to God? Joshua tells Israel that their moral defects are traceable to defects of a religious character. Perhaps, moral defects always are. Israel had not given to God, His rightful place in their lives. Who of us give to Him the place we should in our lives? If honest confession were made, we should have to confess that we are less honest in matters of the soul than we are in our monetary affairs. Joshua connects religion and morality. So did our Lord, and whether we believe it or not there is a connection between the two.

Though ceremonial religion may not be a prerequisite of morality, certainly the soul in right relation with God is; and when a man's soul is in right relation with God he will worship God, for he can do no other.

We may be honest in monetary matters. We may be honest in our social relations. But let us remember that the debt of human life cannot be paid in full until we give God what is due to Him. Our morality, unimpeachable as it may seem to be to us, is not just what it might be, and should be, until it is penetrated and permeated with religion. While morality, even the coldest and most bloodless morality, is to be preferred to immorality, yet no man can be true to himself, and true in things to the fundamentals of human life, until his morality has its roots in the pure and undefiled religion of Jesus Christ. "He hath shown thee, O Man what is good, and what do the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do justly, to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God." If we are to live honestly and simply, as we ought to live, in thought, in speech, and in action, if we are to devote ourselves to the glory of God, if we are to fulfill life's duties, great and small, as honest, faithful men should, we must "cleave unto the Lord, and serve Him in sincerity and in truth." Our morality will always be in kind and character what our religion is. Godlike character is attained only in association and fellowship with God.

Arrested under the new ordinance requiring pool rooms to be closed between the hours of 10 p. m. and 5 p. m., Ah 'Wai, of Kahului, was fined $20 in the district court this week, and spent a few minutes in jail on refusal to pay his fine, to give his attorney grounds for habeas corpus action. ## Some Things Not "Made In Germany"

Sherman said "War is hell." Now comes Billy Sunday, who asserts that if hell were turned upside down, "Made in Germany" would be found imprinted on the bottom. If this be true, and the ecstacy of the last three and one-half years would indicate that it is, then war and hell appear to be about the only notable things Germany has given to the world, unless we include some renowned old masters, who, if they could, would blush to be associated with the Germany of the present. Even the Masonry of Germany has now nationalized itself and turned its back on the rest of the Masonic world.

Many persons today temper their invectives against German barbarism with the regret that the nation has so retrograded, because of the claim that "it has made science." Let us judge by the summarized compilation of a historian. The steam engine which mingled the world's maps, was conceived by Newcomer, an Englishman, and perfected by Watt, a Scotchman. Stephenson, also an Englishman, first adapted it to railway passenger travel, and France, England and America applied it to navigation. The telephone was invented by Prof. Morse, an American who also suggested the Atlantic cable, which was subsequently laid by Cyrus Field, likewise an American. Bell, inventor of the telephone, was born a Scot and grew to fame in the United States. The genius of Marconi, an Italian, brought forth wireless telegraphy. Cyrus McCormick, a Virginian, invented the reaper; Melke, of England, the thrasher, and Eli Whitney, of Massachusetts, the cotton gin.

Germany has been militaristic to the extreme, but it has contributed neither gun-powder, smokeless powder, the percussion cap, nitro-glycerine, gun-cotton, dynamite, torpedo, shrapnel, automatic cannon, magazine rifle, breech-loading gun, gatling gun, revolver, Maxim silencer, hammerless gun, gunboat, ironclad battery or ship, armor plate, revolving turret, submarine, or airplane to the equipment of armies. Germany did not originate aniline dye, vulcanized rubber, liquid gases, gas engines, water gas, the thermometer, barometer, pianoforte, barbed wire, cut nails, plate glass, circular saw, cable car, electric car, sleeping car, air brake, bicycle, automobile, pneumatic register or steel writing pen. America, France and England invented the electric light, the gas light, the acetylene light, the kerosene light, the searchlight, the flashlight, the candle dip and the friction match. Daguerre, a Frenchman, gave us photography, and our own Edison the Motion picture and the phonograph. Galileo, who first saw the heavens with a telescope, was an Italian. Pasteur, the French biologist, demonstrated a connection between microscopic organisms and disease, while antiseptic surgery was discovered by Dr. Lister, of England. Edward Jenner, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was an Englishman, and an American taught the world the use of anesthetics.

The French cut the Suez canal and the American joined the Atlantic and the Pacific at Panama. The metric system by which Germans make their measurements came from France. The method by which they make their steel is that of Sir Henry Bessemer, of England. Lavoisier, the father of modern chemistry, was a Frenchman; Linnaeus, the founder of botany, was of Swedish lineage. To Hutten, of England, the world is indebted for geology; to Meury, a Virginian, for the physiography of the sea; to Descartes, of French parentage, for analytical geometry; to Comte, of France, for sociology; Germany's sons did not compose the crew of Magellan's fleet, the first to circumnavigate the globe, and a German did not lead the way to either the north or the south pole.

Germany is shown to have been an adept in grabbing off the product of some one else's brains and labeling it "Made in Germany." But the "Made-in-Germany" label will not in the future be so conspicuous on the merchandise shelves of the world as it has been in the past. Apparently the greatest thing Germany has done is to falsely advertise itself and to bring such murderous ravage, rapine and ruin upon the world as to fully justify Billy Sunday's assertion.
